Queer Science Fiction

Just as LGBTQ writers have made important contributions to science fiction and fantasy, these literary genres have long reimagined gender and sexuality in pathbreaking and creative ways. The SNMA has an impressive collection of over 200 works of science fiction and fantasy that bring new vivid worlds to life. Largely novels, anthologies, and academic studies, these books stretch from the 1960s to the present day.

A dystopian novel about communities of humans living in underground hives in the 24th century.

The story of a gay relationship in a hateful futuristic America.

A novel about a galactic lesbian romance.

A futuristic novel set in a desert war zone in the U.S.

An Arthurian fantasy novel.

A novel comprised of three stories, the last of which is set in a cyborg-filled New York City.

A collection of stories that feature neutered space travellers, telepathy, Hells Angels, and genetically modified amphibious workers.

The story of a midwife’s quest to rescue the future in a postapocalyptic world.

A dystopian novel critiquing Christian fundamentalism.

A novel broaching questions of sexuality, illusion, and humanity.

A novel revolving around Equinox Industries, a commercial monopoly mining the gas giant, Zeus.

A speculative historical novel about witchcraft and paganism set in New Jersey in the 1700s.

A novel about an Earth colony of humans stranded on a planet.

The story of a cancer survivor on a quest to extend his life.

A science fiction novel about the psychological impact of war.

A science fantasy series about humans colonizing the planet of Pern.

A science fiction thriller set in a post-cyberpunk world.

A collection of scholarly essays about sex in science fiction and fantasy.

Set five thousand years in the future, a novel about a techno-empire ruled by women.

A feminist science fiction novel about interconnected women across universes.

A novel about “Trouble,” a criminal hacker and her ex-lover Cerise.

An anthology of stories about technology and the wonders of space.

A novel about a psychiatrist who is determined to disprove reincarnation.

A collection of science fiction stories by feminist writers.